SPRINGFIELD, KY., WEDNESDAY, APRIL 6, 1910.

NUMBER 18

DEATHS

Miss Louise Montgomery, Mrs. Mary Mudd and Mr. Lem Keeling Answer Final Roll Call.

Miss Louise Montgomery, a young woman of fine Christian character and a member of one of the best families in the county, was summoned by death last Friday. The deceased had for some time been a sufferer from tuberculosis, the disease which finally cut short her life. Funeral services were held Sunday morning and the interment was in the family burying ground at St. Rose. Miss Montgomery was born in the St. Rose neighborhood about 31 years ago, and was the daughter of the late R. B. and Harriet Craycroft Montgomery. Her life throughout was one of goodness and Christian charity, the deceased having been a member of the Catholic church. Her worth was shown and the appreciation in which she was held by the large crowd which gathered at the funeral, friends and relatives from far and near gathering at her bier to show their grief. The deceased leaves four brothers, Messrs. Frank, J. R., Lum and Alex, and two sisters, Mrs. Attie Blandford and Miss Mary Bell Montgomery.

News has reached here of the death of Mrs. Mary Mudd, which occurred in Louisville Sunday morning. Death was due to kidney trouble, from which the deceased had been a sufferer for some years. Funeral services were held on Monday morning at St. John's church, Louisville, and the body laid to rest in St. Louis cemetery.

Mrs. Mudd was the wife of Dr. J. B. Mudd and before her marriage was Miss Mary Clements. She was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Clements and a sister of Messrs. Frank, Robert, and Geo. Clements, of this county. Mrs. Mudd was 78 years of age and was born, reared and married in this county, and spent her life here until 3 years ago, when she went to Louisville to make her home. Mrs. Mudd is survived by her husband, one daughter, Mrs. T. J. Hamilton, several grandchildren and the three brothers mentioned.

God has again shown us that this is not our abiding home. On Friday afternoon, April 1, 1910, the spirit of Mr. Lem Keeling, son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Keeling, having his way to that celestial city. Heaven, a patient sufferer from that fatal disease, consumption. He was twenty-six years of age and was a devoted member of the Williamsburg Christian Church. All that loving hands and skillful physicians could do was in vain and, realizing that all his own skill was a failure, he gave himself up to the Supreme Being and died perfectly happy in his love. After a short discourse by Rev. Grubbs, the remains were laid to rest in the Williamsburg cemetery next day.

He leaves a father, Mr. George Keeling, and a mother, Mrs. Mary Keeling, five sisters, Mrs. Florence Settles, Lettie, Della, Maybell and Bertha, and four brothers, Everett, Millie, Hyatt and Ira, and a host of friends and relatives to mourn his death.

Falcon and Enterprise.

A committee composed of Rev. J. A. Hogarty, R. G. Goodie, Clem Hill, Sam J. Spaulding and William Rickett, representing the Knights of Columbus, Lebanon County, No. 1284, has closed a deal with W. E. Merley for his residence property on the corner of Main and Depot streets, Lebanon, paying the same an amount approaching $6,000. The property will be used as a home by the Knights, who contemplate building, in the near future, on the same lot and adjoining the residence, a 3-story hall and assembly room. The hall will be used for public purposes and accommodate a thousand people.

Mrs. Ed Miles, jr., 30 years of age, died at her home on Hardin's Creek, about three and one-half miles from Lexington, Saturday afternoon, at 5 o'clock after a long illness of droopy. The funeral services were conducted at St. Charles' church, by Rev. Father Herbert, with requiem mass Monday and interment was in the St. Charles cemetery. The deceased was the daughter of Mrs. Charles Hamilton and was a most estimable young woman. She is survived by her mother, sisters and two brothers.

ers, besides her husband and eight young children.

Mrs. Nelson Hays died at her home, northeast of Lebanon, Tuesday, following a long illness of complicated stomach trouble. Deceased was 65 years of age and was highly respected. The funeral services were held at Pleasant Hill church, by Rev. Robert Purdon, Tuesday afternoon and interment was at Hayville cemetery. She is survived by her husband, two daughters, Mesdames Nannie Powar and Bessie Nelson, and four sons, Gailther, Tom, Will and Harris Hays.

Fiscal Court.

Fiscal Court adjourned today after having been in session two days. The prominent business transacted was the passing on claims and the making of appropriations for the county turnpikes. The people of the county will be glad to know that an increase in the European appropriation was made. This is the first time that the newly elected Magistrates have sat and the Court now consists of Judge Little, County Attorney Mayes and Magistrates Hendren, Polin, Gordon, Willett, Votow, Hays.

Damage Suit.

Ansel Phillips has filed suit against S. W. Royalty for $10,000 damages for malicious prosecution. He alleges in his petition that last September Squire Royalty maliciously had a warrant issued against him falsely charging him with the crime of barn burning, upon which warrant he was tried before Judge Hughes and held over to the Grand Jury; that it was afterward submitted to two Grand Juries who each failed to return any indictment and he was finally discharged. He alleged that he expended $100 in the employment of counsel and that he has been greatly damaged and injured in the eyes of his acquaintances and friends. It will be remembered that this is the case in which blood hounds were used in an effort to locate the party who burned the barn. Attorneys C. E. Rankin and J. F. Vansandall represent Phillips. —Harrodsburg Herald.

Dipping, the Accredited Remedy.

Mr. J. D. Whitehouse, who lives near town on the Lancaster pike, is quite an extensive sheep raiser, has been making a careful study of the best means to prevent "scabiness." Recently in the neighborhood of 1,000 old sheep and lambs have died in the vicinity of Perryville, and the disease, in fact, has become quite general throughout the State. Mr. Whitehouse has communicated with a number of the biggest sheep men in the country and they are unanimous that the only successful way to eradicate the disease is by the dipping process. There are several reliable sheep dips on the market and Mr. Whitehouse's advice to the farmers is that they begin at once to dip their sheep before they are stricken down with this disease which is proving so fatal in all parts of the Commonwealth. —Danville Advertiser.

BOOT LEGGERS

And Other Offenders Against The Law Catch it In Police Court.

Last Thursday was indeed a red letter day in Police Court when the police dragnet brought before His Honor, preachers and laymen, men and women, black and white, old and young, bootleggers, wife beaters; an aggregation one might be tempted to say equaling the crowd in rage and tags and velvet gowns whose approach to town was heralded by the bark of the dogs in Mother Goose. "And they all got there," in fines ranging from $50 up, mostly up. The chief offenders were those who have been guilty of selling "squirrel" and it seems as if there has been rather keen competition in the sale of this contraband article. Among those who suffered for selling liquor without a license were Sager Smith, Person Grundy, Jim Key and Ben McElroy, who were touched up to the tune of $50 each. Sherman Roundtree was fined $100 on one charge and $50 on another, while his consort, Della, was called upon to go into her stocking in a Eva Tanguay, for $100. It cost Tom Smith $60 for selling whiskey in local option territory. In the case of Ben McElroy, charged with whipping his wife, Judge Noe held that the common law as to wife beating was not in force on High street and fined Ben $25. It cost Ben $50 to sell whiskey and only $25 to whip his wife the presumption is that when Ben again breaks the law, if ever, the better half will know something of it.

The prosecuting witnesses in the liquor cases were H. Hays and W. G. Holliday, to whom one of the defendants later declared he would never have sold had he known they were "perspectors."

HOW THE BLUFF WORKED.

An Incident of "The Days of Old and the Days of Gold" in California.

Written for the Sun.

The Dead (which Pioneer was a literary gem on newspaper lines in the mining town of that name in California in the early '90's. The editor was a native of Arkansas, a dead shot and one of the most noted poker players in the Gulch, which contained about 4,000 people at this time. The working force was made up of any "tourists" who happened along. About the date of this incident three of the most hopeless and reckless of the tribe had obtained temporary employment, on the "three bars a day and free lunch" racket as a bonus. They were severally known as Rocky Mountain Smith, the "Pigskin," an Oregon exhibit, and "Windy" Taylor, whose legacy had won for him his title. These "boys" were always ready for a "fight or a frolic," if either produced liquid results.

The piper was well patronized, even if some of the "news" dated back almost to the revolutionary war. Subscribers and advertisers were generally punctual in paying up, as editor Brown's gun practice was more feared than his pen. There was one individual, however, who went by the cognomen of "Dog Need Jerry," who ran a whiskey joint and general supply store, a reputed "bad man," who had become involved to the amount of about 50 dollars for advertising, etc., and no amount of moral suasion would induce him to "liquidate." "Jerry" usually visited Sacramento once a month for supplies and on one of these occasions he returned with a woman, whom he introduced as his wife. It turned out that she was the wife of another man and that the Dead Gulch Adonis had succeeded in "alienating her affections," an unpardonable crime in the eyes of the miners of those days. The first married woman who "struck" this camp was supplied with a bodyguard, night and day, and was not permitted to perform any labor that they could relieve her of. When editor Brown had gathered all the known facts in the case, he published a highly illuminated account of the affair, literally exhausting the graphic mining camp vocabulary, and "burning" the ubiquitous Jerry with anger. His rage knew no bounds and he swore that he would clean out the whole office and furnish a few cadavers to start the new cemetery on the hill.

The editor was duly notified by his friends of Jerry's intention and a scheme was hatched out at once to "call" Jerry's bluff and go home one better. That night the "boys" inspected the camp and unearthed a lot of old gunnery, etc., that might have done duty with the pilgrim traders, but which, for all modern use was only fit for the junk shop. The force spent an hour or two that night converting the erstwhile peaceful sanctum into something resembling an arsenal and at the rehearsal, the "devil" was stationed so as to lock the door after their worthy had passed in. The walls were festooned with antiquated cutlery and the "boys" were armed with innocuous double-barreled shotguns.

True to his appointment Jerry entered the outer office at about 9 o'clock with two army coats strapped on his hips and demanded to know where that d—d editor was and entering the sanctum found himself looking into the muzzles of three ominous looking shotguns, backed by a peremptory order to throw up his hands instantaneously, with the alternative of having his head blown off. Up went his hands, while the editor, in his Arkansas drawl, requested "Mr." Smith to "remove the gentleman's weapons as they might go off and hurt him."

This was done and the editor, in his polite manner, spoke as follows: "Mr. Stimson, I am led to understand that you manifested much concern lately about the loneliness existing in your new graveyard, and which we fully agree and think it is about the proper season to begin plantin' and have about concluded to let you have the honor of heading the procession. However, there is a small matter of some $50 represented on this bill here, which, if settled, must have a beam' on the case. What dead have you in regard thereto?"

"Wall, I reckon it's up to me," said Jerry, as he unloaded the dust and paid the bill. Editor Brown then complacently admitted: "These 'ere weapons are mighty dangerous tools to be carryin' round promiscuous like, and as we understand you are about to move out, for fear you might get hurt in the packin' we'll just take care of them for the present. Good day!"

"Dog Nose Jerry" slunk away like a whipped cur, but he was unmercifully gazed by the miners that he had to pack up and sees pastures new. S. J. A.

The Two Sinners.

She was a woman, worn and thin, whom the world condemned for a single sin. They cast her out of the king's highway, and passed her by as they went to pray. He was a man and sore to blame. But the world spared him a breath of shame. Beneath his feet he saw her lie, but he raised his head and passed her by. They were the people who went to pray at the temple of God on the Holy day. The scorned woman, forgave the man; 'twas ever thus since the world began. Time passed on, the woman died; on a cross of shame she was crucified. The world was stern, and would not yield, and they buried her in the potter's field. The man died, too, and they buried him in a casket of cloth with silver trim, and said as they turned from the grave away, "We have buried a noble man to-day." Two mortals knocked at heaven's gate, stood face to face to inquire their fate. He carried a passport with an earthly sign, but she a pardon from love divine. Of ye who judge 'twixt virtue and vice, which think ye entered paradise? Not he whom the world had said would win, for the woman alone was ushered in. Ex.

Good Cough Medicine for Children.

The season for coughs and colds is now at hand and too much care cannot be used to protect the children. A child is much more likely to contract diphtheria or scarlet fever when he has a cold. The quicker you cure his cold the less the risk. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the safe reliance of many mothers, and few of those who have tried it are willing to use any other. Mrs. F. F. Starcher, of Ripley, W. Va., says: "I have never used anything other than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for my children, and it has always given good satisfaction." The remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a child as to an adult. For sale by Leo Haydon Drug Co.

One of the many causes contributing to the "panic" of 1907 was the slump in copper due to the decline in demand. The growing use of copper means increased activity in various branches of industry and science shows that business continues on the up grade.

Immigration made a big record last year and the indications are that this year's figures will be even larger. And with such an impeding greater he comes the necessity for a careful examination at all ports of entry. Government officials must be compelled to do their work thoroughly and see that no undesirable forms any foreigner are allowed to land.

HOWEVER many diamonds the lady of wealth may possess to deck her fingers, ears and neck, she is always roused to covetousness by the sight of pearls. There is something alluring in the sight of a rope or a collar of pearls around a white neck, and they are to most women the most desirable jewel of all. But they must be large or in quantity and they are, if good, costly in the extreme. The small pearls one sees—used pearls—are cheap, but still set about a large diamond in a ring they seem to improve the diamond, and at the same time to derive some of its virtue from their neighborhood.

The pearl is all the more sought after because, unlike other precious stones, no amount of artificial treatment, such as cutting or polishing, can enhance its beauties. Nature's workmanship must be perfect and untouched and the pearl comes to you exactly as it emerges from the oyster. On the other hand, it has this disadvantage. It is liable to discoloration and the only way to be worn at rest from too much contact with the skin. Still that is not the only stain which suffers discoloration. Was it not the famous necklace of Marie Antoinette, preserved in a guarded case in a museum, which after years of nonuse began to lose color and had to be worn at intervals in order to give it its pristine beauty?

The value of the pearl is comparable with that of the diamond. Its price varies with its size, form and general beauty of appearance. A pearl of the first water must have a symmetrical form, a smooth surface, be free from all blemishes or fractures, be lustrous and have a fine white color and a perfect luster; and it so happens that it is rare to get this combination. The perfect shape is spherical, egg shaped or pear shaped. The perfect color is white, but there are yellowish pearls much esteemed in India and China.

It is not generally known, however, that there are pearls whose color are red-brown, bronze, garnet red, rose red, pale blue, greenish white, violet and purple. But most curious of all is the black pearl, which on account of its hardness is much sought after. When it is of a uniform color and of a perfect form, it is worth almost as much as pearls of the purest white.

The price of a string of perfectly matched pearls is much more than that of a single pearl, for it may take years to get together a collection of pearls which are alike in size, shape and color. A string of pearls of Indian pearls costs $20,000, of white $25,000, of black Pacific pearls $30,000, and even then you could not think that your string was anyway unique.

To seek a unique pearl one must go to the Hope collection, where there is one almost as large as a hen's egg, almost but not quite flawless, which is valued at $75,000. A smaller one, valued at $45,000, is a much smaller one of 27 5-16 carats among the French crown jewels which is valued at $40,000.

There are other pearls, however, of distorted shape, called baroque pearls, and of these the most famous is the great Southern Cross, which is formed of nine beautiful pure white lustrous pearls, naturally formed in the shape of a cross, one inch in length, for which your offer would stand at $50,000 if you wished to buy it.

To supply the world of women with pearls, the Ceylon government administration yearly proclaims a "fishery," determining whether or not it is held by examination and a sample catch from the government banks. Then if the marine biologist who is in charge declares that the number of oysters warrants a fishery, the government sends out a fleet of boats and an army of pearl divers, coolies, merchants, pearl buyers and speculators move as fast as they can to the Gulf of Manar—the ornate and oriental town of 40,000 inhabitants arises out of the sand. There is no magic about it, for the oysters of the town are easily built. A rough framework of tree branches is formed over it as roof and walls are put the mats known as radian—formed of the woven leaves of the cocoon or date palm—is to give it also more pretentious buildings erected for the use of the government officials, residency, postoffice, hospital, court house, while there are streets, lanes, street lamps, all the conveniences proper to a town.

The aristocrats of the town, outside of the officials, are the divers, and they disdain to do anything but dive, having their own servants, who attend to the ropes and keep an eye on the oysters brought up.

Each morning the fishing fleet sets out, some 300 odd vessels, some of them carrying as many as 50 divers, their servants, sailors and hangers-on. When the fishing ground is reached the diver takes his basket, draws a long breath, steps on to the heavy stone hung by a rope, and is plunged by his attendant to the bottom, seven or eight fathoms below. Filling his basket rapidly, he is drawn up and repeats the operation as often as he can. About two in the afternoon the government gunboat fires a gun and the fleet sets all back. As there are no wharves, the oysters are carried on shore and deposited in the "kotia" by the strong porters. As soon as the shells are deposited they are counted, two-thirds going to the government, as their share, the other one-third going to the boat which brings them in. At sunset the shells are auctioned by the thousand, and there is fierce competition, for who knows what the lottery of chance may bring them in pearls. The oysters brought are then removed apart by each buyer and placed in his compound, where they are carefully guarded till the sun beats upon them, putrefaction sets in and the oyster begins to disgorge its treasure. Then the malodorous contents of the shell are washed in vats and the residue yields—my lady's pearls.

WOE OF HINDOO WOMEN

When a Hindoo prays he implores his god that when he dies he shall not be cursed by being born again as a woman or as vermin. That is the attitude of the native men of India toward women and against which the missionaries in the Orient are directing all their energy.

Dr. Eleanor Stephenson, a Brooklyn woman who has been practicing medicine in India for three years and who will return to her work there soon, makes an appeal to American women to go out there, The New York Evening Telegram says.

"I want the women here to realize what it means to be born in America," she said recently. "To be born where a woman is the backbone of the man, his strength and help in every way. Why, out in Ahmednagar, where my work is, a woman is no more than an animal. She is for the purpose of raising children and that is all. A man thinks much of his own—if he is lucky enough to have one—than he does of his wife. A Hindoo husband will let his wife die before he will call in a man to give her medical or surgical treatment. That shows the need for women physicians in the Orient."

In Ahmednagar, which is an inland plateau about a hundred miles from Bombay, there are two physicians, Dr. Ruth Hume and Dr. Stephenson, and one American trained nurse, Miss Johnson. Under Miss Johnson there are 14 native women who have had some slight training and these help with the nurses. In the mission hospital which this handful of women run 15,000 people were treated last year, an average of 41 a day. These folk have come from a radius of about 50 miles, though some special cases have come as far as 300 miles.

The Rev. Alden H. Clark, who is an educational missionary at the same place as Dr. Stephenon, gives some interesting figures about the number of nurses and doctors in the Orient. "There are probably," he says, "not more than 100 nurses in the entire missionary world and there 30,000,000 people in non-Christian lands who have no medical aid except missionary physicians. All Christendom has sent out only 689 medical missionaries, male or female, and this body maintains 248 hospitals, 97 leper asylums and 21 classes for native women."

"One physician who had no nurse to help him treated 15,000 cases in a year. So you see that the supply of trained medical assistance is woefully inadequate. In Calcutta, which has the best facilities in the Orient, three-fifths of the population die without any doctor or other trained medical assistance in their final illness. In China there is probably one American or European trained doctor for every million and a half of people. In the United States there are 160,000 physicians and 23,000 nurses, an average of one physician to every 560 people."

"Of course we do a great deal of actual nursing and that is most important," Dr. Stephenson says, "but another thing, which is even bigger, is this: We show women who have thought themselves wholly unloved that some one does care for them. They know that there is a very small money consideration given us and that what we do is done for love. So they love us. When I see women physicians struggling for a living here and know what a field there is in India, I feel as though they must be told."

"The kind of work I have been doing is a terrific appeal to the sympathies. We have to respect caste, which makes nearly all of our cases long standing. One woman whom I treated came to me with her entire arm in a gangrenous condition. She had picked her finger seven months before, at the time of her husband's death. On account of her caste she could not so much as leave the house for the seven months, during which time septicemia set in and went up as far as her shoulder. I told her that her arm would have to be amputated. She refused absolutely to part with it, and died as a result."

"Another woman burned her knee and turned up at the hospital five months later with that part of her leg in terrible condition. The leg was cut off and the woman made a perfect recovery. I went many miles into the interior to see an injured woman. She had fallen down a well and was fearfully bruised all over. I found her lying on the door grinding corn, every turn of her arm causing the most intense agony. She couldn't bear to have me even touch her, she was suffering from the fever which had to be taken to the hospital or she would die and he asked who would cook the bread if she were gone. He refused to allow her to go. All I could do was to leave a little medicine."

Dr. Stephenson finds that the natives invariably prefer using ointments to clean dressings. Women come in large numbers to get ointments for raw sores where their husbands have beaten and cut them and they are full of gratitude to the doctor. She finds that those of high class are just as brutally treated and just as grateful as the lowest.

"Transmigration is one of the strongest beliefs in India," she says, "and on that account the people will not kill any animal, not even a flea. As a result the poor homes are overrun with bedbugs and other vermin, which spread all sorts of fevers and diseases."

"And another of their ideas is that we don't know anything about raising babies. Hindoo mothers, without exception, give up their babies to make them sleep while they work in the fields. As a result a large proportion of the little Hindoo babies die before they are a year old. Most of the work among the natives is surgical and the obstetric cases are the most interesting. This is because the natives have medicines of their own but know nothing of the use of the knife."

Hinduism is awakening to the fact that if the great sub-strata of Hindu society known as the depressed classes be raised by Christianity, the whole structure of Hinduism is threatened with overthrow. This awakening is being followed by efforts in various parts for the improvement of these poor people. The latest is a movement in Ahmedabad. In that city, on August 29, a meeting was held at which the attendance of the depressed classes was encouraged and in which they were allowed to sit beside caste people. Resolutions were passed for the formation of a Central Hindu association, which should have for its objects the raising of the depressed classes and their readmission into Hinduism after being converted to foreign faiths. As to the means to be adopted for realizing these objects, the following suggestions were made: (a) Starting schools, clubs and associations; (b) establishing preaching missions; (c) publishing papers, periodicals, tracts, etc.; (d) adopting such other means as may be conducive to the above objects.

My little son, a boy of five, broke out with an itching rash. Three doctors prescribed for him, but he kept getting worse until we came to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They finally advised me to try a certain medical college, but his treatment did no good. At the time I was inclined to try Cataplasms, but he was so bad that I had to cut his hair off and put the Cuticura Ointment on him on bandages, as it was impossible to touch him with the bandage. There was not one square inch of skin on his whole body that was not affected. He was one mass of sores. The bandages used to stick to his skin and in removing them it used to take the skin off with them, and the screaming from the poor child was heart-breaking. I began to think that he would never get well, but after the second application of Cuticura Ointment I began to see signs of improvement, and with the third and fourth applications the sores commenced to dry up. His skin peeled off twenty times, but it finally yielded to the treatment. Now I can say that he is entirely cured, and a stronger and healthier boy you never saw than he is today, twelve years or more since the cure was effected. Robert Wattan, 1148 Forty-eighth St., Chicago, Ill., Oct. 9, 1907.

Unpublished Utterances.

Herein is set down a hitherto unpublished utterance of Ebenezer Scrooge. There is no doubt of its authenticity. "An a boodley boodley boodley bo, doodley doodley doo!" It was his favorite way of addressing babies. Carlyle invariably addressed babies thus: "Kookey kookey kookey koo, kookey kookey koo!" Occasionally he varied that with: "Keekey keekey keekey kee, keekey, keekey kee!" Shakespeare's conversation with babies was this: "Too-roo-ee!" Sir Isaac Newton used to say: "Howdydoo!" George Eliot used to say: "Cunnis sin! Burdile!"—Puck.

The Right Spirit.

Apropos of Valentine day a passenger on the Bermudian said: "Mark Twain once told us, in a little Valentine day speech on this boat, of a little woman who had the right valentine spirit. Acceptance of him he could take with equal grace. 'Will ye be my valentine?' he said on the boat. 'No, I'm not.' 'No,' she replied, 'I am another.' He heaved a sigh and said: 'Shure, thin, darlin', I wish ye was twice as big as I could have at laste the half of ye.'"

Rosin Rots Things.

Rosin is good for fiddle bows, but when it is put in a soap to give it a bright finish, it makes the soap eat the clothes and rots them. It holds the dirt there, too. Get a good, clean, pure soap—get Easy Task soap. It's made of coconut oil, borax, naphtha, and clean talow, and it takes the holding and the rubbing and the all-day labor out of washday. And it doesn't make the hands red and sore and ugly. A cake costs only five cents; there's no economy in using the old-fashioned kinds.

Sometimes.

Leighton, Ky.—Andrew McMullen, a young man of near Natural Bridge, came to the Eastern Kentucky lunatic asylum to visit his mother. Mrs. McMullen failed to recognize him. The boy was so affected by this that half an hour after he left the institution he became himself violently insane. It took the combined efforts of four patrolmen to prevent his hounding pedestrians on Main street and to get him to the police station, where he is detained pending the arrival of relatives.

FOR CONGRESS:
HON. BEN JOHNSON,
Of Nelson County.

PROBABLY no better argument could be advanced in support of the Postal Savings Banks than the object lesson furnished by the astounding number of convicted defaulting bank presidents! There are thirty-eight in the Leavenworth penitentiary alone and probably as many more "doing time" in other penal institutions throughout the country. Has the term "dangerous classes" been misapplied? If the rate of interest on deposits will be small, the principal will assuredly remain intact, and no surer safeguard of the people's money can be found anywhere in the world than our solvent Uncle Sam.

THE SUN is in receipt of a copy of Mr. O. O. Stealey's book, "Twenty Years in the Press Gallery," through the courtesy of the Hon. Ben Johnson, to whom our thanks are due. As its title implies, it is a compendium of affairs in the House during ten sessions of Congress, from the 48th to the 58th, and is well gotten up. Mr. Stealey was correspondent during the period for the Louisville Courier-Journal. The introductory preface was written by Henry Watterson.

STUDENTS of English history will call to remembrance that one Titus Oates, in the Cromwellian days, we believe, wrote and circulated a pamphlet, entitled, "Killing No Murder." Judging from some of the verdicts rendered by Kentucky juries recently they must have been studying the work. At least they have borne out the idea conveyed in the title.

On the Wrong Track.

Folks who have been upraising the packer, the farmer, the butcher and a host of other dealers for the high cost of living have been on the wrong track, according to W. H. Wiley chief of the bureau of chemistry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, in an address before the Knute and Park Club, at Kansas City, Mo., he said: "Every time a boy leaves the farm it is an impetus to increased cost of living. A scarcity of farm labor makes wages higher, and an added city populace adds to it the cost of food products. When the boys go back to the farms prices will recede to their normal level."

Going Some.

As an instance of what money will do when it is not hoarded but put into the channels of trade in the payment of debts, we present the following occurrence: Mr. Y. W. McCray borrowed from the State Bank and Trust Company, of this place, one thousand dollars which he paid to F. V. Fowler; the latter paid it to Ches Noel. Noel paid the same thousand to Kirk Pinkston; and the latter paid it to Allen Sims. Sims paid it to Y. W. McCray and McCray paid it to the State Bank and Trust Company from whence it started on its mission of relief. It left Harrodsburg via the Bohon turnpike and returned through Cornishville and was absent from the bank vault only three hours, having paid debts to the amount of $7,000 and looked none the worse for wear. Mr. Y. W. McCray paid two thousand dollars with it and the bill settled $7,000 in debt.—Harrodsburg Herald

SERIAL STORY

The Master of Craven

By Marie Van Vorst

Author of "Amends of the Mill," "Miss Desmond," etc., etc.

CHAPTER I.

Since Tempest had shut himself up to Craven he had added to rather than diminished his popularity. He refused to be further lionized; either timid or wise in the white heat of his fame's flame, he ran away! Rather than watch his fame fall to ash, or fearful that its tense heat would harm him? For neither reason. He was not thinking of London, or his public, he was thinking of himself.

In Craven, whilst immured, he was as well delighted at the change. The castle itself was prison, standing as it did, 12 miles from any railway, dominating, as it did, the entire country of—shire. Craven was a fortress for the writer's house of labor—a pleasure-garden for his leisure. But on this occasion he had not come to rest for the symphony of the world extended to his work. Craven was not to offer in this sojourn any of its storehouse tonic—nor was it demanded that it should suggest a new theme, or even create an old idea. Mr. Tempest, a solitary inhabitant of his study, asked a new helm of his retreat—it must be a panacea.

"It should be," he said aloud as he replaced a book in the shelves and found another, "a padded cell."

Into the great bow window whose squares of glass let in the whole wide country, sweep to his eyes—once a veritable lover's eyes for this English nature, whose grass and beauty Tempest had made to live and bloom in his book till all England echoed his muse—into the beautiful windows the housekeeper daily delivered the writing-table. Tempest many times before it had seen hour after hour slip away, until, exhausted, yet supremely content, he had risen, and, as he went, the pile of manuscript grown at his hand, his work done, and he himself free and buoyant on the air. The creator can be before his self-appointed task. But writing materials remained these days untouched.

November had been cold and the drear barrenness of the landscape, although not yet despoiled of leafage, was hidden on this afternoon by a mist full of rain. The landscape, the extent of blank gloom before him as he faced it by the window, leaning against his work-table, his back to the room. Something in the leaden quality of the outside reflected itself in his countenance. But he had not time to follow his meditations to their end, for a rap on the door told one was repeated, then the door opened and his housekeeper came in.

"I beg pardon, Mr. Basil—" He did not stir.

She waited a moment, then advanced: "I beg your pardon, sir."

After another silence he blurted out:

"Well? What for, pray? If you have any good reason to break in on me, Henry, you had better say so."

"I've disobeyed you, sir."

"I'd rather forgive you than hear about it—don't do it again."

"I won't disobey you, sir."

Tempest turned reluctantly to the intruder. She said "Oh," involuntarily as she caught sight of his face: the last hour had ravaged it. Her quiet affection, not her sympathy, modified his mood.

"What the devil have you done?" he asked, not unkindly. "Can't be any worse than coming here to me after my express injunctions."

"It's worse, sir," she nodded: "I've let in a lady."

She breathed freer with the whole confession of her crime's enormity. Tempest's surprise was as sharp as his displeasure. "A lady—you're dot!"

She pleaded, "I couldn't help it, Mr. Basil—she had walked from Craven—don't see you, sir—and I hadn't the heart."

"Come!" he exclaimed furiously, "I am not to be obeyed then, Henry? I see plainly you are taken advantage of—I mean to say you're astounded! I give orders to leave me in peace, to refuse my doors; to keep my mail, my dispatches, away, and you admit God knows whom and for what purpose at your own door?"

She let him fume, and her patient, gentle bearing of his detestable humor made him ashamed. "What for, pray?"

"I don't know, sir," she said humbly. "I couldn't say no—because she begged for a moment—she had walked the 12 miles and she says she must look it back. I'm sure."

"She's a note-book? Or course!"

"She's a pretty hat on and a long dark coat, and she is so lovely, Mr. Basil, that—"

She finished subtly—and triumphed, for her master slightly smiled. "It's a face, and quite ridiculous. You've gone so far I can't drag you out of my back—as if I had a string to it. Fetch her in."

Tempest passed his nervous hand through his hair, gave a last look to the gray without, as though he confided his melancholy to it—never fearing to return again for it—never fearing to come out into the room.

When Mrs. Henry reappeared she opened the door, consigned her guest quickly to the study, and withdrew like lightning for fear she should be hailed to escort her out again!

The stranger desisted in this fashion looked about her rather startled. Tempest, in a black velvet jacket into whose pockets his hands were thrust, blocked up the foreground. He saw her embarrassment and that her lips were almost white. She bowed to him, still standing where Mrs. Henry's cat-like ushering had placed her. "I am Lucy Carew," she announced in a voice that did not waver at all. "I have come all the way from America to see you."

Mr. Tempest started. The sudden addition of thirty-five hundred miles to the twelve was material. "I shall seem ungracious if I say that I receive no one, not even an emissary from the Cape of Good Hope." He chose at random, and Craven's meaning caught his sensitive ear. He smiled. "You will let me be inconsequent and except that point? You see, to be frank, I have refused to see everyone, Miss Carew (he said her name as though it were a household word) every one—friend, enemy, kind and unkind. I am a recluse, and I fitted her well, it fell well around her supple figure.

"My gloves," she said apologetically, "were soaked through. They are drying in your housekeeper's room. I dried there myself for half an hour before she would disturb you."

As she spoke there crossed Tempest's feelings, growing more and more amiable and gracious, a sudden revulsion against her which she could not have understood had he let her perceive it.

"How can I further your career or hinder it?" he asked formally.

She did not appear to take umbrage at his altered tone, but, leaning forward in her chair, received him into her confidence with extraordinary facility and an assurance that was compelling in itself.

"I have been obliged quite suddenly to take a moment of livelihood to a woman of my age" (she named it, and he smiled—it was so young) "such a question coming for the first time is puzzling. Last week the editor of a well-known monthly offered me a position at a fixed and generous salary—it here she paused.

As she talked Tempest was studying her mentality and quality of spirit as best he could, being a man as well as a psychologist, and given the fact that a specimen was very good to look at, he was not surprised.

She had quickly undone her veil and taken it off, and he then saw the face under her eyes, the pallor of her face, and without the least effort it was a luminous face, if such a term might be used—he thought it might. Her figure was concealed by a light, dark coat that rose to her neck, and she nestled into the comfort of the chair with an acquiescence of fatigue that expressed itself in a sigh. Her eyes, fastened on Tempest, were the loveliest things he had encountered for a long time.

The unconventionality of the visit, her calm behavior in it, touched his humorous eye. He slightly mocked her as he spoke, in a tone not the less agreeable and perfectly true.

"What wages are you winning?" Miss Carew, you have won it! How much of the 12 miles did you walk really?"

She held out a small foot in a badly damaged high-heeled shoe. "A cart brought me to the door, and then I walked on—12 miles the man said it was, and it seemed it!"

He did not wish to ask this young woman why she came to him; he dreaded lest she should say. The moment she should ask him for his autograph the singular and pleasant charm of her appearance would vanish and he would become his brutal, savage self again. This unusual visit would not bear vulgar or even tangibility. Despite the adjustment of his eyeglass he saw her as it through a film; it added to the reality of her presence.

"You will have tea? Perhaps you will make it for me?"

The lights had been brought in with the drawing of the curtains over the rain-swept window.

Miss Carew's hands lay inert on the chair arms. She shook her head. "I am afraid I can't—I am so tired."

Tempest rather clumsily made it and gave her a cup and a bit of toast. During the few moments her host's face had clouded again. Evidently he had forgotten his guest and looked up with a start as she spoke.

"You have not asked me why I came, Mr. Tempest."

"I don't wish to know."

"Ah," she smiled. "If I don't tell you, it will be because you forbid me—and—"

"I do forbid," he said shortly. "If it's tiresome reason—I won't say your reasons are usually tiresome, for I am sure they never give the real cause—nothing would be so delightful, I am willing to believe, as a woman's sincere motive or reason for what she does! It's a black rose, a 'morte blanche.' Miss Carew, I've never seen any of the three."

She did not take this opportunity to remark at his psychology of feminine subtleties, but said equably: "The result of such forbidding would be the blocking of my whole career. I am sorry for you, he finished brusquely.

She had unfastened the collar of her coat and it fell back. Her dress under the collar was a soft blue. Tempest rose to move aside the tea-table that was between them.

"Let me help you off with that dress. It's warm here and you won't feel it when you go out."

He wanted to see her released from the charms of her uncompromising garments. He threw the wrap on a chair, and she stood before him in a dress of some soft, dark material with white at the neck and wrists. It fitted her well, it fell well around her supple figure.

"My gloves," she said apologetically, "were soaked through. They are drying in your housekeeper's room. I dried there myself for half an hour before she would disturb you."

As she spoke there crossed Tempest's feelings, growing more and more amiable and gracious, a sudden revulsion against her which she could not have understood had he let her perceive it.

PRACTICAL PLAN FOR CONVENIENT SHEEP RACK

Device Described and Illustrated Is Such as Used by Michigan Breeders—Is Ninety Feet Long.

Plan of a Convenient Sheep Rack.

The sheep rack described below is such as is used by most of the large sheep feeders of Ecolf township, Calhoun county, the one mentioned being on the farm of Herman Mahrie, says a writer in Michigan Farmer.

The racks in this barn are 90 feet long, there being a row down each side about midway from the side to the center, leaving space enough between to drive through with the spreader in cleaning the barn. The ends of the mangers are open to a feed alley at each end, and the feeding is done by walking through the spreader in cleaning the barn. The sides of the mangers are dropped while the grain is being fed, then raised while the lambs eat it, dropped again while the hay is being placed, and raised again to allow the lambs to eat it.

I presume the plan by which a stretch of 90 feet of gates is raised in an instant from end of manger is the principal thing desired. I think the illustration will make this plan. It is done by means of an iron lever, (b), and ash cord, (f), fastened to the sliding board, (c). A pull on the lever raises the board, (c), to a position by the side of the stationary board, (d), and a catch holds the lever in position, thus holding the sliding board up until the lever is released and the board drops down. Strap from guides, (i), hold the boards in position, and will be seen from the illustration the boards, (c), work independently of each other and are separated a little at the ends to prevent binding. Should any do so and not drop down to place, a little work of the lever will start them. I do not remember the exact construction of the rack, but it is some what like the illustration, Fig. 1 showing a side view and Fig. 2 the end view of one-half of the manger. The other half is similar. (a) is a post, (b) a slanting board which forms the side of the grain bottom, and (e) the slanting post to facilitate putting in the hay and help to keep clean from falling on the necks of the lambs.

DRAFT ON THE DOUBLETREE

There is a difference of opinion among ranchers regarding the pulling ability of each horse in a team. Some are of the opinion that the horse ahead is pulling the most and vice versa.

The draft on each horse depends entirely on the relative lengths of the lever arms and the lengths of the lever arms depend on the position of the clevis pins with respect to the draw pin. In upper diagram (1) the clevis pins and draw pin are in a straight line hence the lever arm is the perpendicular distance from the draw pin A to the line of draft of each horse. This means that in this case A, B and A, C, which are equal, no matter how much one horse is ahead of the other. One horse always pulls the same amount as the other.

In diagram (2) the clevis pins are behind the draw pin and when one horse pulls ahead of the other the lever arm A, C, becomes longer, and A, B, the lever arm of the one behind becomes shorter. In this case the horse ahead having a larger lever arm has the advantage and pulls less than the one behind.

In diagram (3) the clevis pins are ahead of the draw pin and when one horse pulls ahead his lever arm shortens and the lever arm of the one behind lengthens. The horse ahead, having the lever arm shorter pulls more than the horse behind.

There's more strength in a bowl of Quaker Oats

MADE UP HIS MIND QUICKLY

Prospective Juror Evidently Was Not Favorably Impressed with Prisoner's Appearance.

In a southern county of Missouri, years ago, when the form of questioning was slightly different than now, much trouble was experienced in getting a jury in a murder trial. Finally an old fellow answered every question satisfactorily; he had no prejudices, was not opposed to capital punishment and was, generally, a valuable find. Then the prosecutor said, solemnly:

"Turn, look upon the prisoner; prisoner, look upon the juror."

The old man adjusted his spectacles and peered at the prisoner for a full half minute. Then, turning to the court, he said:

"Judge, turn if I don't believe he's guilty."

The unconscious humor of it so convulsed the court and everyone else, except the prisoner, that the loss of another juror was overlooked.

Traveler Notes Interest in Progress of Up-to-Date Agricultural Community Taken in Bulletins.

(BY W. MILTON KELLEY.)

I have noted one thing in particular while traveling in several of our best agricultural states, and that is, when I see a number of well dressed farmers discussing beef and milk rations feeding young animals for a healthy growth, and the use of potassium phosphorus and protels, carbohydrates and their uses and functions in plant and animal growth, I am invariably in the presence and up-to-date agricultural community.

Now, the question is this: Do the best and most intelligent farmers read these bulletins and keep in touch with their station workers, or does the reading of these bulletins and keeping in touch with these station workers make better and more intelligent farmers?

It is one or the other considered from either standpoint, for these bulletins are not read by the uneducated and unprogressive farmers, nor do they circulate in poor farming sections as freely as do the in the better agricultural communities.

The difficulty is that we do not fully realize or appreciate the magnificent work that many of our station workers are accomplishing toward elevating the agriculture of our country. The successful station worker must be a searcher after truth and the searcher

Selection of the Boar.

No matter how many sows are kept on the farm the selection of the boar is of great importance. There are many pure bred hogs in all parts of the country, so there is no reason for the use of a scrub boar by anyone, save the Swineherd.

The character of the get of a scrub boar is guesswork, whereas with the pure bred boar there is some assurance that his get will be uniform and of a quality indicated by his ancestors. When possible the board should be selected on the place where he was raised.

Among the permanent pastures composed largely of a single grass and blue grass, Russian brome grass, Bermuda grass, buffalo grass and bunch grass, these Kentucky blue grass is now the most widely distributed. KENTUCKY WOMEN SUCCEEDING IN NEWSPAPER WORK

Arthur Brisbane, the highest salaried newspaper man in America, who spoke before the Chicago's Woman's club in that city recently, said journalism is "the greatest thing in the world." Not even love did he hold as an exception. Simply because journalism is just a big bundle of love, and all that is not love in this man's profession is picked into the waste basket. This has proven true in the careers of Kentucky women who are succeeding in newspaper work today.

Especially in the experiences of Mrs. Daisy Fitzhugh Ayers, a Kentucky, now engaged in newspaper work at the national capital. She uses more love than words as a correspondent for the seven largest papers in seven other states besides Kentucky. Mrs. Ayers has been on the staff of the Courier-Journal bureau in Washington nine years and is connected with several New York publications. She is the author of "The Conquest," a novel of Washington life. Mrs. Ayers was reared in the newspaper home of Lexington and she has been writing ever since she was a school girl. She is the widow of a Yale honor man. Her parents are Capt. and Mrs. R. H. Fitzhugh, who came to the Blue Grass capital from Virginia.

Girls of the "Pennyrite."
In Breckenridge county Miss Eva McGlothlin and Miss Mayne DeHaven are bright young women who are making more than pin money by correspondence for The Breckenridge News and The Fourth District Leader. Miss McGlothlin is correspondent for the News from Irvington and Miss DeHaven is representative for The Leader at Cloverport. They are paid well for their correspondence. Miss McGlothlin had never written for a newspaper before she took up the work for The News and the way she learned to write items was helpful to the girls who want to learn reporting. She clipped reports about fires, deaths and daily occurrences from different papers and by these she learned to write the news happenings of Irvington. Connected with The News is a most remarkable young girl, Miss Esther Jackson, who has been in Mr. Babage's office nearly six years and she began work when she was fifteen years of age. When the editor is off duty, she can write the news matter with perfect ease, although her regular duties are confined to the printing department.

Writers of Central Kentucky.
At Lexington are five young women who have attained journalistic accomplishments and whose efforts have been remunerative. They are: Miss Mary B. Bryan, Miss Katherine Hill Billingsley, Mrs. Bradley Bailey, Mrs. Desha Breckenridge and Miss Alice Loyd.

Miss Bryan is society editor for The Lexington Herald. She has been with that paper thirteen years and has been missed but two months from the office in that time. Miss Bryan is an enthusiastic club woman of Kentucky, belonging to the Lexington Chapter of the D. A. R., the Woman's Club of Central Kentucky and the Pison Club of Louisville.

Miss Billingsley is society editor of the Lexington Herald. She is the daughter of the well-known lawyer, George E. Billingsley, who married Miss Natalie Davidson, daughter of one of the most successful bankers in the South.

Mrs. Bailey has been with Mrs. J.

is for The Enquirer. To hear Mrs. Duncan talk of journalism is indeed inspiring, for she is desperately in love with her work. She says the newspaper woman is a part of one of the most powerful forces of the world. The Fourth Enquirer.

One of the best correspondents in Mercer county is Mrs. J. H. Westfield. She is local editor at Perryville for the Kentucky Republican, published at Harrodsburg. Mrs. Westfield's letters are always bright and entertaining.

In Letchfield lives one of the most distinguished writers of the middle-west, Mrs. Hattie Beall Grinnell, who all her life has written for country weeklies and various publications. She has dropped most of her newspaper correspondence, but still writes instructive and wholesome articles for The Meade County Messenger and The Letchfield Gazette, her home papers.

Mrs. Mamie Plummer Braughton, society editor of The Franklin Favorite, has won laurels in Journalism by her tact and winsome manner. She gathers her material by attending entertainments, receptions and club meetings, and she is extremely popular in the club circles of Franklin. Mrs. Braughton has learned that a reporter can not get much news matter by asking persons the question, "Have you any news?" News is something one has to pick up quietly, so quietly that one must tip-toe many times to get an item.

What will be a surprise to a number of southern newspaper people is that Miss Ora Leitch, a former newspaper woman of Paducah, has recently married. After leaving Kentucky she was city editor on a leading daily in Salt Lake City, and little did one dream that this gifted journalist would take time to entertain Cupid.

Ella Hutchinsan Ellwanger.
The Courier-Journal's special correspondent at Frankfort is Mrs. Ella Hutchinsan Ellwanger, who has not only made a name for herself in Journalism, but is now being recognized as a magazine writer of some note. Nine years she has been connected with the Kentucky State Journal, but two months ago she severed all connection with that paper to devote all her time to writing articles for New York publications. It is said that Mrs. Ellwanger is truly responsible for the handsome Louisville and Nashville depot at Frankfort, for through her editorials in the Frankfort Journal she aroused a public sentiment and demand for this building. E. C. Walcott, who recently retired from the editorial department of that paper, allowed Mrs. Ellwanger to fill in writing up the mayor and the city dials of Kentucky's capital, and by this she did much for the civic betterment of Frankfort. Once Mrs. Ellwanger got "drunk." That is, she became intoxicated with success when her first article of any length was published. She said she was completely overcome with joy and surprise when she saw her article on the first page of the illustrated section of a leading newspaper. That was in 1901. About that time she originated the first society page in Frankfort newspaper.

Mrs. Ellwanger has written three magazine stories for children and has had many skits in Lippincott's. Her Sunday letter to the Courier-Journal is one of the most enjoyable features of that paper, and it has been complimented by writers all over the United States. This month she and W. E. Bridwell, an ex-newspaper man, published a book—an edition of the General Assembly and the state capital. Her admirers readers will be glad to learn that in May or June her article, "Evolution of the Public Opinion as Applied to State Prisons," will appear in Hampton's magazine. Mrs. Ellwanger's success is greatly due to persistence in exercising the Golden Rule in her daily social and business affairs.

Copies of "The Lady of the Quill" have just come from a Louisville publisher and all southern and eastern friends of Mrs. Jennie C. Morton will welcome this little book of sketches of her life. This biography of Mrs. Morton is written in a loving and picturesque manner by Mrs. Ellwanger, who is receiving many flattering notices by the press and the public on her life-story of this famous woman.

May Have Their Day.
"A Newspaper Woman's Day" has been suggested for the program of the mid-summer meeting of the Kentucky Press Association in June, which in all probability will be held at the Mammoth Cave. Dan Bowman, editor of the Woodford Sun, and secretary of the association, favors the idea, and, no doubt, this will be one of the most attractive occasions of the forty-first annual gathering of the Kentucky editors.

The Kentucky newspaper women, as a whole, are the happiest and most cultured society in any state in the Union. May their ink bottles be full and running over with glory and honor forever!

To abolish the compass of the ancient mariners. Then, too, it will annihilate much that is picturesque in ocean navigation. In the old days the skipper would come out of his cabin, and you'd gruffly to the man at the wheel, "How's she headin'?" "West, nor'west by west, sir," would be the answer. "That has the true ring of the sea."—Popular Mechanics.

Have You Found?

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? We can furnish positive proof that it has made many remarkable cures after all other means had failed.

Women who are suffering with some form of female illness should consider this.

As such evidence read these two unsolicited testimonial letters. We guarantee they are genuine and honest statements of facts.

Cresson, Pa.—"Five years ago I had a bad fall, and hurt myself inwardly. I was under a doctor's care for nine weeks, and when I stopped I grew worse again. I sent for a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, took it as directed, and now I am a stout, hearty woman."—Mrs. Ella E. Alkey, Cresson, Pa.

Baird, Wash.—"A year ago I was sick with kidney and bladder troubles and female weakness. The doctors gave me up. All they could do was to just let me go as easily as possible. I was advised by friends to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier. I am completely cured of my ills, and I am nearly sixty years old."—Mrs. Sarah Leighton, Baird, Wash.

Evidence like the above is abundant showing that the derangements of the female organism which breed all kinds of miserable feelings and which ordinary practice does not cure, are the very disorders that give way to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Women who are afflicted with similar troubles, after reading two such letters as the above, should be encouraged to try this wonderfully helpful remedy.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health, free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

CLARENCE LE BUS.

President and General Manager of Burley Tobacco Society.

The Bulletin of Commerce, published at St. Louis, Mo., in a biographical article, of recent date, has the following in regard to Mr. Le Bus:

He has reached beyond the average man and above the level of commercial or professional standing because of his mental energy and industry.

He was neither more nor less than his associates in capacity when starting in life, but through self-discipline and energy he has easily outstripped them all in his march to success.

He is not a wanderer or a genius like so many having a fungus growth, and withering away at the touch of frost or sunshine.

He is the outgrowth of good common sense and clear-headed judgment, like the oak, well rooted to withstand the floods and storms.

With these mental instrumentalities there are no heights to which he may not aspire and no obstacles beyond his power to remove.

He is, therefore, alert, determined, sagacious, lucid and courageous, in every condition of commerce, trade, the industry, traffic, finance or the learned professions.

He is an artist, not with the brush and chisel, but in his masterly observations of men and the multitudinous affairs of business, or in the profound analysis of law and government.

He is never a theorist nor a speculative philosopher, but a sound constructionist of ways and means and methods of achieving the objects he has in view, and always practical in his assertions of right and justice.

When he grasps a proposition, question or enterprise with energy, and mentally elucidates their every feature and detail, he applies the constructive element of their worth and probable success.

He is quick to comprehend, but deliberate to act, if a doubt shadows the undertaking. Nor has he hoodwinked words for superiors of position, nor violent speech for those less circumstanced, but commands equality of respect and consideration.

These qualities, being well balanced, have developed abilities that lead and control the judgment of others, and while they create a wide and wholesome influence, they become rapidly popular.

With such an admirable make-up of mental strength and position, he turns away from them all with the greatest satisfaction to the more delightful enjoyment of a few hours at home.

In its quiet and charming environment he finds a rich and inestimable compensation for the cares and responsibilities of his active outward life.

There are more angels at home than men in heaven, and with these he can worship and love with none to either disturb or divide his affection.

Happy is the man who rises to honorable prominence and has a foretaste of heaven upon earth.
